Pinsky: Goodbye to District 22; Will Lead Energy Administration

On Tuesday, December 20, Senator Paul Pinsky announced that he has accepted the invitation from Governor-elect Wes Moore to serve as director of the Maryland Energy Administration. Pinsky has been a long-time advocate of environmental issues and addressing climate change. Pinsky will be stepping down from his position as senator, representing District 22, which includes Greenbelt. It's a position to which he's been elected eight times and has held since 1994.

Among the improvements to District 22, Pinsky noted that he'd secured state bond bills to invest in the communities in his district, including the Greenbelt Co-op Supermarket and the Old Greenbelt Theatre. Pinsky recently sponsored the Climate Solutions Now Act of 2022 that requires a 60 percent reduction in greenhouse gases by 2031. A former teacher, he has also been a strong advocate for education and was particularly instrumental in adopting the Blueprint for Maryland's Future.

Testing Gravity

Fearless Greenbelter Lambert Shares Regular Folks' Wants

by Stephanie Quinn

Lying on the padded floor of a modified Boeing 727, Greenbelter Denna Lambert began to float as the plane crested the apex of its parabola and the effects of gravity receded.

Lambert said she was always a "fangirl" when it came to spaceflight, from the time she was growing up in Little Rock, Ark., and science fiction films showed her more inclusive and cooperative worlds.

"Oh my goodness, what if we could get to that place – where everyone is treated equitably?" Lambert remembers thinking. "It didn't matter how you looked or where you came from or whatever. You're set on this common mission."

Lambert participated in the parabolic flight mission Thursday, December 15, in Houston, pursuing her vision of spaceflight as a way to build a more inclusive world, in space and on Earth.

The flight, which created conditions of microgravity, demonstrated technologies and techniques to support people with disabilities when they go to space. Lambert, who is blind, joined a group of 16 flyers with diverse disabilities on the second weightless flight run by AstroAccess, a project of the nonprofit SciAccess, which advances disability inclusion in STEM (science, technology, engineering and math). No astronaut with a known disability has flown in space to date.

Lambert, who is Diversity, Equity, Accessibility and Inclusion lead for NASA's Early Stage Innovation & Partnerships (ESIP) portfolio in Washington, D.C., tested tactile graphics and personalized hearing technology on the flight. But she said the flight's most important result was contributing to the body of knowledge on weightless flight with a crew including people with disabilities.

"If we do it once, that's cool," she said. "But if we do it twice, with a larger crew, with even a wider range of disabilities, then it's like, 'Okay, now we've got replicability.'"

Sheri Wells-Jensen, a member of AstroAccess's organizing team, an associate professor of linguistics at Bowling Green State University and leader of the blind crew on the flight, said, "Disabled people drink a lot of Kool Aid about what we can and can't do."

AstroAccess missions remind crew members not to drink that Kool Aid. "All day long you're hearing, 'Please sit down, and I'll get that for you, honey,' instead of, 'Come over here. I need you,'" Wells-Jensen said. "And those messages are really different."

HAPPY NEW YEAR

Greenbelters Celebrate Kwanzaa

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

On Monday, December 26 around 20 Greenbelters celebrated the first day of Kwanzaa at the Kwanzaa and Culture Unity Breakfast at the Greenbelt Youth Center, organized by Greenbelt Station resident Chiquita Jackson. Kwanzaa, first celebrated in 1966, is an annual celebration of African American culture, drawing on African traditions.

Last year Jackson hosted a celebration with about eight close family members and friends at her apartment in Greenbelt Station. This year she rented space at the Youth Center to be able to include more people in the celebration. "I wanted to take it to the next level," said Jackson, who publicized the event through social media and interviews on WAMU. As an event planner, she is skilled at bringing people together and organizing celebrations. Jackson even cooked the soul food for the event herself, beginning early in the morning on Monday.

At the unity breakfast, most of those who attended already celebrated Kwanzaa but they were looking for a space to celebrate together, especially after the online celebrations of recent years, Jackson told the News Review. "I had great conversations with people who are now planning to incorporate more community events into their celebration," said Jackson.

Kwanzaa is organized around seven principles, one for each day of the holiday. They are:

1. Umoja (Unity): To strive for and to maintain unity in the family, community, nation and race.
2. Kujichagulia (Self-determination): To define and name

Report of a Cutting Incident Leads Police to Say: Lock Doors

On Thursday evening, December 22, residents were advised by police to secure their homes and lock doors after a report of a cutting on Crescent Road and reports of a man matching the description of the suspect knocking on doors of homes along Crescent and asking to be let in.

At 9:17 p.m. near 28 Crescent Road, officers responded for what was initially reported as a cutting. Two people sustained minor injuries, after an argument between people who knew each other had taken place inside the home. The argument was over property and resulted in a fight in which two people were injured. Though a bladed weapon was present, it caused none of the minor injuries. The suspect took the victims' property and ran from the residence prior to police officers' arrival.

Further investigation determined that the event was not random. The suspect is described as a tall Black man wearing a black jacket, light-colored shirt and blue jeans. Officers searched the area but did not locate the suspect. The crime is now being investigated as a robbery. This is an active and open investigation.

Letters to the Editor

Focus on Inclusion

I appreciate Susan Taylor’s detailed account of council’s latest decisions related to the Reparations Commission initiative, which meetings are set to begin in January 2023.

As a relatively new Greenbelt resident, walking through Old Greenbelt or around Greenbelt Lake is a disturbing experience, affected by the presence of historical markers promoting a particular time in this planned community’s history, yet failing to refer to the segregation endured by African Americans at the time.

The Reparations Commission initiative, like the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in South Africa and Canada, is undoubtedly a process which carries high hope and expectations for the future of our city.

Council has to be lauded for its sustained effort. In the article, references are made only to Mayor Emmett Jordan and Councilmember Colin Byrd. Yet, at the last regular council meeting prior to finalizing the selection of the members, I was most impressed by a remarkably progressive proposition made by Councilmember Rodney Roberts to not reject any of the 30 uniquely qualified applicants, a simple thoughtful act of inclusion that would have set the tone, model inclusive behaviors and call people to account!

Call A Friend, Not Just on the Day

December 28 is National Call a Friend Day. Don’t underestimate the power of a phone call just to say, “How are you?” This can be an immediate mood boost, especially for someone living alone.

Grief

I found the article about dealing with grief very appropriate this season as my sister’s husband died a few weeks ago. The article addresses how to deal with grief, but it doesn’t touch on the ways family/friends can support those grieving without adding to the feelings of loss. I wondered if Gloria Walters-Flowers has any other suggestions.

The Fabelmans

In this story from Steven Spielberg, young Sammy Fabelman falls in love with movies after his parents take him to see The Greatest Show on Earth. Armed with a camera, Sammy starts to make his own films at home, much to the delight of his supportive mother. “Spielberg’s semi-autobiographical drama celebrates the magic of the moviemaking while reflecting on the important balance between art and family,” says critic Rene Sanchez of Cine Sin Fronteras.

Empire of Light

Set in an English seaside town in the early 1980s, the film is a powerful and poignant story about human connection and the magic of cinema, from Academy Award-winning director Sam Mendes. Empire of Light features a stellar cast led by Academy Award winner Olivia Colman (The Favourite, The Lost Daughter), BAFTA winner Micheal Ward (Blue Story, Top Boy) and Academy Award winner Colin Firth (The King’s Speech, A Single Man). It also reunites Mendes with Academy Award-winning cinematographer Roger Deakins (1917, Skyfall).

Paper Moon

In this 1973 classic, real-life father and daughter Ryan and Tatum O’Neal team up as slick con artists Moses Pray and Addie Loggins in 1930s Kansas. When “Moze” is unexpectedly saddled with getting 9-year-old Addie to relatives in Missouri after the death of her mother, his attempt to dupe her out of her money backfires and he’s forced to take her on as a partner. Swindling their way through farm country, the pair is nearly done in by a burlesque dancer (Madeline Kahn) and an angry bootlegger.

Inspection

In Elegance Bratton’s moving film inspired by his own story, a young, gay Black man, rejected by his mother and with few options for his future, decides to join the Marine Corps, doing whatever it takes to succeed in a system that would cast him aside. But even as he battles deep-seated prejudice and the grueling routines of basic training, he finds unexpected camaraderie, strength and support in this new community, giving him a hard-earned sense of belonging that will shape his identity and forever change his life.

New Deal Hosts Two Band & Book Events

The Reilly Goulait Band, which has been a regular act at the New Deal Café for years, will be back again in January with a special twist. On Thursday, January 19, from 7 to 9 p.m., the band will perform live music, including new original songs inspired by Bob Reilly’s book, Rideshare by Robert: Every Ride’s a Short Story. Reilly, of Laurel, has heard approximately 33,000 stories from passengers during the past seven years while driving for Uber and Lyft.

On Sunday, January 22, from 1 to 3 p.m., Reilly will be at the New Deal for a Meet the Author event, with a book introduction, Q & A, storytelling and an acoustic musical presentation of original songs inspired by stories in the book and the rideshare experience. Reilly will be joined by Joe Goulait of the Reilly Goulait Band for this special event.

GHI Launches Search For General Manager

On December 16, GHI officially launched the search for a new general manager with the release of a board-approved position profile. This search is necessary because current General Manager Eldon Ralph will retire soon.

Those interested in learning more or applying for the general manager position can find a detailed description of the position as well as application requirements at <https://tinyurl.com/tnykr9a6>. Review of submitted resumes will begin in early January. Questions about the search can be directed to the GHI Transition and Search Committee at ghitransitionandsearch@ghi.coop.

Volunteers, Students In Compost Workday

All are invited to join the Wigglers on Saturday, January 7, starting at 9 a.m., for an outdoor workday at the three-bin hot-composting station behind Roosevelt Center, alongside the Aquatic & Fitness Center. High school students are encouraged to earn volunteer hours while learning how to prepare food waste diverted from Greenbelt’s own Co-op Supermarket, for rapid hot-composting. Volunteers can also enjoy snacks and conversation while they work.

On workdays, the Wigglers (a group of volunteer humans) pre-compost food for their red wiggler worm workers, who live on the loading dock of the New Deal Café, producing vermicompost, a highly prized soil amendment and nutrient load for plants – including bulbs, shrubs, fruit, vegetables and house plants. The Wigglers were honored on September 30 by a visit from EPA officials and also received the Jim Cassels Award presented by the Co-op Supermarket.

To learn more about how hot composting works and help to turn food waste into a valuable resource used to grow plants and sequester carbon – instead of producing methane at the landfill – come by anytime between 9 and 11 a.m. on Saturday morning, January 7. Email NewDealWigglers@gmail.com with any questions.

A Game of Chess, Anyone?

by Gloria Walters-Flowers

Walk into the New Deal Café on a Monday night, and a bunch of bent heads will greet you. Sunday’s usual sounds of lively music and chatter, silverware clatter and finger-snapping have long since faded. On Monday evenings, the tabletops become cerebral battlefields on various chess sets where plastic kings, wooden pawns, stately queens and good bishops battle and advance toward victory. Strategy, patience and focus are the common traits of players, and words like castling, sacrifice, Fianchetto, Sicilian Defense and checkmate are common terms.

Organizer Effie Levner started the club in May of this year. She saw a need and addressed it. First introduced to chess while living abroad over 40 years ago, Levner created the club to bring Greenbelters out of isolation and provide a safe activity that brings the community together. “With Covid, so many people are dealing with depression and loneliness. This is a way to get out and play,” she said. “We are a welcoming group with no judgment or competitiveness.”

A Success

The diverse group of 45 members, with about 18 regulars, are of mixed ages and skill levels. Seasoned chess players like Gary Fok are happy to share teaching strategies with the less skilled player, and newbies often surprise themselves with a win. Alicia Deligianis, a social worker who has been playing for two months, recently received a new chess set for Christmas. “I love it. It sharpens my brain and forces me to focus, not just on the current move, but also a few moves ahead.” Still considered a beginner, she was happy that she was able to share tips with her younger opponent. “I’ve learned a lot since coming and could even teach a little today!”

With so many public appearances this holiday season, Mayor Emmett Jordan did something just for himself. With no council meeting on his calendar, the mayor chose to spend his evening in a friendly game of chess. With hot chocolate in hand, he sat down with a club member for a few games. A short while later, as he donned his hat, he left with two wins and two losses and a satisfied, relaxed look.

The group meets at the New

City Council OKs IT Upgrades, Comcast Agreement, Security

by Deb Daniel

On Monday, December 12, the Greenbelt City Council approved the Comcast franchise agreement and upgrades for city building security systems.

With the new Comcast franchise agreement, Mayor Emmett Jordan noted that payment percentages remain the same but there are some other changes from the previous agreement. The term of the franchise agreement is 10 years. This agreement was negotiated as a group including the county and all its 27 municipalities. Jordan mentioned that the agreement supports Greenbelt's broadcast of city meetings on television and enables Greenbelt Access Television to provide training and other community broadcasts.

Director of Information Technology Dale Worley compared the services under the new and old agreements. Most significant are the public, educational and government access television channels, which provide the services Jordan described for broadcasting council meetings and community events. The city will continue to have eight county and three municipal channels for 10 years. This agreement will also support C-Net, which connects Greenbelt to other jurisdictions until the C-Net links are transitioned to a government network. Comcast will also continue to provide the existing drops to government buildings with a provision to "price at cost," which probably will be negligible.

To Councilmember Judith Davis's inquiry about additional fees, Worley replied that the issue involved the definition of "gross revenue" and this agreement ties Comcast to a generally accepted gross revenue definition. Worley mentioned that his legal counsel had said that, across the whole country, this was one of the best agreements he had seen. To Jordan's question about broadband versus cable access agreements across the county, Worley replied that Federal Communications Commission rulings do not allow such combined agreements, meaning that content delivery over the airwaves or over the internet is precluded from cable agreements.

Council approved the Comcast franchise agreement unanimously.

Petitbon Alarm System

The Community Center, which is not under the same alarm system as the rest of the city-owned buildings, will be upgraded to the Petitbon alarm system. This upgrade will provide a better user management system, will include upgrades to all the city fire alarms and will transition the city away from unreliable copper wire systems.

Worley started the discussion by saying all city buildings are wired for alarms and those alarms communicate back to Petitbon over old copper wires. Substituting cellular and internet communications can improve connectivity. Using uninterruptible power supplies will restart communication during a power outage.

Mayor Pro Tem Kristen Weaver asked if the alarm systems had to be powered up for the smoke detectors to work and Worley said he would check into that.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts suggested that the wiring in cellular and internet systems is as vulnerable as copper wiring. Worley explained that currently, with the phone systems, one system serves as backup to the other phone system. Similar backup capability in the cellular and internet communications networks would also be part of the alarm system.

Those Short of New Booster Risk Being Short of Breath

by Cathie Meetre

It is noticeable in reports from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC, see graph) that adults over 65 who catch Covid remain disproportionately vulnerable. Infected seniors are hospitalized and die in far greater proportions than younger infected people. It's important to note, however, that the seniors who are hospitalized and who die are much less likely to have had all available boosters than their age-mates who are not in the hospital (although this is not in itself enough to explain the entire disparity). Boosters clearly reduce the risk of hospitalization and death at all ages, but the effect is most noticeable among the most vulnerable.

Recent Prince George's County data show some increase in overall cases – though in the county the number of hospitalized patients is currently under 50, but the status for cases and resources remains at a “medium” level between high and low.

Bi-Valent Booster

The new bi-valent booster became available September 2, 2022. Those who have not had a booster since that time have outdated protection. Even if science can't guess what the virus will do next, it can at least race closer to neck and neck.

The new booster has been adapted by manufacturers to address the variants that replaced the earlier forms of the Covid-19 virus. The original shots were designed for the original virus and the new generation of boosters has been re-tailored to meet the threat of its ongoing evolution as well. The booster people received until September of 2022 is much less effective than the booster available today and will have also partly worn off as the protective effect reduces with time. It's necessary to face the fact that Covid, like the flu, is an ongoing threat that needs at least annual attention. Each update in boosters stays only one step behind the new antics of Covid-19.

Age Gap Widens

During the first wave of Covid, when those in nursing homes died in such numbers, the rate of hospitalizations of seniors was about three times that of younger people. But now seniors are hospitalized at a rate almost four times higher than younger groups and, though lack of up-to-date vaccination is not the only factor, it is at least one under the individual's control.

And, think of this. Young people continuously turn into old ones and soon three-years-worth of people who weren't seniors in 2020 will have achieved this landmark status.

Keep Boosting

Older adults are not getting the boosters that help them keep up with the evolving virus, even though shots are still free and widely available. CDC reports that only about one-third of those over 65 have received an updated booster shot.

The determinedly unvaccinated continue to rely, presumably, on catching the virus from time to time to keep their immunity up or not catching it at all. As they age into the ranks of seniors, their first or next time around the track may be spent in a hospital bed.

Booster shots are available at local pharmacies. Call the Co-op, 301-474-4400; Giant, 301-982-2359; CVS, 301-441-8811; Safeway, 301-345-8777; or Demmy's, 301-220-3124.

Data used are drawn from the CDC and from the Prince George's County Covid-19 Dashboard.

Local High-Rise Condo Owners Get Bad News about Building

by Catherine Shearing

The owners of a local high-rise condo bordering the city recently got a big shock as an engineering company reported that millions of dollars of work would be required to replace all the condo elements that are beyond their estimated life.

Condominium ownership was all the rage in the early 1970s. This then-new form of ownership gave each owner, usually in multifamily housing like a townhouse or a low- or high-rise apartment, a deed to their own unit and the opportunity to own a home, even if they couldn't afford or didn't need a house.

In a condominium, the deeded owner is responsible for the wall or floor or ceiling of their unit and all inside it – plumbing, windows, doors and electrical service.

In a condo, an elected homeowners' association (HOA) board oversees maintenance of the building structure and facilities shared by all. They usually hire a specialized management company to do this day-to-day.

GHI Learned its Lesson

Greenbelt Homes Inc. (GHI), a housing cooperative rather than a condominium, learned a hard lesson in the late 1970s when the original structures were 40 or so years old. GHI had to borrow millions of dollars because, in the quest to keep monthly fees low, it had not built sufficient reserves to cover replacement of major systems nor had it invested sufficiently in ongoing preventive maintenance. In 1979, the piper had to be paid.

To its credit, GHI has not repeated this mistake and its most recent makeover was paid for out of reserves without borrowing anything. GHI owners had paid in a fair proportion over the years as part of their monthly co-op fee, unlike recent purchasers in the high-rise condo who will have to foot the bill for those already gone.

But, as the collapse of the Miami high-rise in 2021 showed, the condo boom is now facing its own crisis as the buildings of the 1970s reach their 50th birthday. Generations of condo owners have not paid enough into reserves for refurbishing buildings in which plumbing, electrical, roofing, windows and hallways are now often well beyond their estimated lifespans.

foundations, rusting out the structural steel. But surrounded by Greenbelt Park, in an inexplicable bite out of Greenbelt’s western margin on Kenilworth Avenue, is the 18-story Westchester Park development. While one of the tall buildings is a rental facility, the other is a condo with approximately 350 units.

When fears generated by the Miami collapse spurred high-rise condo HOAs to seek professional evaluation of their buildings, the results were generally shocking. Westchester was no exception. Its owners were told that to replace all the elements judged to be beyond their estimated life would cost ~$45,000 per two-bedroom unit and ~$15,000 for an efficiency.

It’s important to note that being beyond estimated life doesn’t necessarily mean dangerous or damaged, just older than a fairly conservative estimate. For example, the estimate for a dishwasher is 10 years and for an elevator mechanism, 20 to 25 years. Patio doors are estimated at 30 years. Unsurprisingly, however, owners were horrified at the cost and freaked out by the idea that they and their homes might be at risk.

After years of keeping monthly payments down (and with board members even running for office on a track record of no increases for several years), the HOA was suddenly faced with a potential huge payment to their particular piper. In particular, the newest buyers were slammed with a huge assessment that should have been paid for gradually in accumulating reserves by their predecessors. Those who had sold units escaped scot-free. Those that bought recently got slammed with a cost equivalent to about 15 percent of what they just paid for the condo.

Are the Condos Safe?

The report did not investigate safety per se, just listed building components beyond their estimated life. Some, inevitably, are related to safety but their actual condition wasn’t ascertained. It is probable that a phased approach to fixing these elements, with the riskiest first, and an ongoing commitment to increasing reserves – learning GHI’s lesson, in fact – would avoid the need to borrow as much up front.

But HOA board members aren’t building specialists or financial wizards and their reaction is to borrow enough to fix everything. But if they do that, because their residents are paying off the loan, they can’t also build reserves – and the cycle begins again.

Ironically, perhaps, American Rescue Plan Act funds are currently available that may possibly give grants and no-interest loans to lower-income building residents who get into arrears on their payments.

Low-Rise Developments

There’s no indication that garden-style apartments have been similarly assessed. The fear engendered by the Miami collapse – of a complete tower of buildings falling – is not as much a factor, but it’s hard to imagine that the many condos within the city’s boundaries have no age-related problems, even though they are not prone to such a one-shot devastation. The determination of HOAs to keep costs low, however, may mean that reserves are inadequate for major renovations.

Become a Plogger: Make Greenbelt Sparkle
What is “plogging”? It’s an eco-friendly exercise that involves picking up trash while jogging or walking – taking care of one’s health at the same time. Plogging was coined by Swedish outdoorsman and environmentalist Erik Ahlstrom and comes from plocka, the Swedish word for pick up. Greenbelt Plogs, a RUAK initiative, is a fun and engaging way to clean up litter from the streets, paths, streams and ponds while raising awareness on the importance of preventing storm-water pollution. Join fellow Greenbelters in helping make Greenbelt sparkle. Those interested in joining Greenbelt Plogs should email Robert Goldberg-Strassler at spreadruak@gmail.com.

Donate Sneakers For People in Need
Greenbelt Community Church, United Church of Christ (GCC) is collecting athletic shoes by partnering with GotSneakers. This sneaker recycling program helps to keep sneakers out of landfills, where they have harmful effects on the environment. A donation box is located outside the Fellowship Center (the small building behind the church) for people to drop off sneakers at any time.

One If by Land, Two If by Pool?
Aquatic & Fitness Center Welcomes All

by Susan Taylor

The bright blue roof welcomes Greenbelt residents of all ages and abilities to the Greenbelt Aquatic & Fitness Center (GAFC).

Part of Greenbelt History

Located behind the Municipal Building and next to the Youth Center, GAFC has been a central part of Greenbelt life from the beginning. When the public pool opened in 1939, it was the first in the Washington, D.C., area. Now as then, like the News Review, the pool supports the founding ideals of community-building and healthy living.

Community Fitness

Swim students, weightlifters, lap swimmers, bike riders, aqua power-movers, local fire/rescue and police departments, yoga stretchers and the swim team share the facility. While safety comes first, being together as a community is not far behind.

Stephen Parks, GAFC supervisor, points to a sign in the pool area that highlights lessons from kindergarten about community. “We want to share with everyone and that requires the patrons to share with each other.”

The GAFC offers group and individual fitness options for folks of all ages. Each week, people from infants to elders find exercise, fun, relaxation, new skills and challenge there. Neighbors greet each other warmly and support the ways other

Greenbelters are caring for themselves.

Land-based Exercise

Fitness attendants are stationed in the exercise wing to help. “If anyone has a question about how to use a machine, if they’re looking for a workout, all they have to do is ask,” Parks explains.

Sessions with certified personal trainers are also available. Bravo System weight machines even have scannable bar codes for information.

Water-based Fitness

“Water fitness is coming back,” declares Parks. GAFC reduced its hours during the height of the pandemic but, while it retains cleaning protocols, the facility has returned to fuller hours.

On a recent morning, lap lanes were filled, people were scattered throughout the pool using the water as resistance and students from a recently ended water-fitness class filled the hot tub with a shared sense of pride, laughter and relief.

Open Daily

GAFC is open seven days a week. The fitness wing offers patrons access to state-of-the-art exercise equipment, stationary bikes, rowing machines, treadmills, stretching mats and much more.

While the outdoor pool is open from Memorial Day to Labor Day, the indoor pool is open all year round. Admission fees are discounted for Greenbelt residents. Patrons can pay for daily, monthly, seasonal and annual access.

Jackson says she likes to kick off the Kwanzaa holiday celebrations on the first day, reflecting on the principle of unity, which for her means community. The event was a great success and one of the enjoyable aspects was the diversity of ages of participants, including children, teens, young and older people. The youth were playing games, families gathered and ate together, participants had great conversations about why they started celebrating Kwanzaa and how they have been inspired to incorporate community events into their celebrations.

"There aren't any other Kwanzaa celebrations in Greenbelt that I know of," said Councilmember Ric Gordon, who attended Monday. "This may have been the first public event. Certainly, in a city building – that's never been done before," he told the News Review.

For Gordon the breakfast was the only Kwanzaa event he'll attend during the period, which runs from December 26 to January 1. For the rest of the holiday, he says he'll observe Kwanzaa by taking each day, incorporating the principles of Kwanzaa and what it means.

As for Jackson, she's already planning for a bigger celebration next year, exploring the possibility of partnering with the City of Greenbelt, and considering a space that could accommodate more people than the Youth Center.

Chiquita Jackson has just been appointed to the Greenbelt Reparations Commission.

Games are provided for the little ones to play at the Kwanzaa celebration on December 26.

A fallen tree in the frozen Lake on Christmas Day

Flight day started unremarkably enough, with flyers passing through the Transportation Security Administration before their early morning departure from Houston. But once the plane reached an altitude of 25,000 feet, the plan for the flight was precise choreography. Flyers lie down on the floor of the plane's 60-foot "floating area," which is covered in squishy material like wrestling mats in a high school gym, said Wells-Jensen.

Then the plane arced into repeated parabolic motion, ascending 18 steep hills and navigating 18 sharp descents. Twenty parabolas were planned, Lambert said, but the plane ran out of airspace in the 100-square-mile box allotted by the Federal Aviation Administration.

During the ascents, flyers experience gravitational forces that make them feel almost twice their weight on Earth. Then, when the plane noses over the top of its hill of atmosphere, flyers slowly, gently lift off the floor. From the peak of each parabola to its valley, crew members had 20 to 30 seconds to conduct their experiments.

Anna Voelker, AstroAccess co-founder and executive director, who participated in the first AstroAccess flight, said the tactile graphics and personalized hearing technology that Lambert helped test are both examples of universal design – the principle that systems designed for diverse groups of users are better for all users.

"By creating access for those who have been historically excluded, that really just benefits science and discovery itself," they said.

Lambert said the tactile graphics were overwhelmingly successful. In an environment lacking tactile stimuli, hand-sized panels with raised lines and markings mounted on the plane walls relayed messages to help low-vision and blind flyers orient themselves. But these graphics could also benefit sighted flyers in the event of a smoky fire or power outage on future voyages.

Blind and sighted AstroAccess flyers underwent training to read these tactile graphics with a swipe of their hands, Voelker said. To test whether flyers could "read" the graphics, the graphics lied. If flyers could see or use environmental cues to orient themselves without the graphics, they had to be able to interpret the graphics correctly to reproduce the lie.

"So where it says the front of the cabin is, where the back of the cabin is and which wall you're on, none of that is necessarily true," said Voelker. "The only thing that's always true is down."

Lambert was also one of six flyers who participated in a seat-belt docking test, successfully fastening and unfastening a five-point seat harness in microgravity within 15 seconds – currently a required capability to fly in space.

AstroAccess flight participants take off from Houston on December 15 to test technologies to support disabled individuals in space.

Lambert added that SonicCloud audio-assist software, which allows users to adjust sound to their individual hearing needs, enabled her to better hear flight instructions through her headphones.

The rise of commercial spaceflight may help democratize space travel. "Because we're at the very beginning of spaceflight becoming more available to not just government agencies," Lambert said, "the whole point is to make sure that all of the human experience is included from the very beginning."

The European Space Agency announced in November the selection of its first astronaut with a disability, John McFall, whose leg was amputated after a motorcycle accident. NASA has not announced plans to send an astronaut with a disability to space.

But ESIP Director Jenn Gustetic said Lambert's work will play a crucial part in furthering equity and inclusion at NASA. Since joining ESIP a year ago, Lambert has been building a multi-year strategy and a team to engage diverse space technology proposals across ESIP's programs. "Our hypothesis is that by embedding this capability within our organization," said Gustetic, "it will result in more sustainable and impactful and program-customized solutions to this work."

Lambert said that in the week of rehearsals before the flight, NASA astronauts and physicians, as well as representatives from the space tourism companies Blue Origin, Sierra Space and Virgin Galactic, showed up to pitch in with errands and to observe.

"I think they genuinely want to see, 'How can we make this work?'" Lambert said.

She said she feels lucky to have pursued a lifelong interest through AstroAccess. But, she said, "I don't want to be seen as this awe-inspiring person. If we only see people with disabilities being just inspiring, then it takes us out of being just regular folks with regular interests."

Lambert said the flight combined the focus and seriousness of scientific experimentation with the childlike joy of flipping and spinning in microgravity. Lambert's son, seeing photos of his mom floating during the flight, said he wanted to float too.

Lambert, whom Wells-Jensen described as "good at learning new things fast" and "an exquisite team player," said the desires and experiences of individuals with disabilities reflect a full spectrum: "We should be expected to engage in all aspects of what humans want to do, from the normal to the crazy."
